Two modern types of harvesting machines have been purchased recently by local farmers. A. E. Bruce has added to his equipment a new John Deere grain binder and C. A. Dodge a new John Deere corn harvester. These machines will be of interest to many as distinct types of better binder construction. They are equipped with a late pattern short turn truck, which takes all strain from horse necks and avoids long turning space and shaky operation of machine. The binders are also equipped with roller bearings throughout. It is worthy of note that up-to-date farm tools are using roller bearing construction where only a few years ago such things belonged only to the automobile and motor driven machinery. These machines were sold by Marsh-Allen Co.—adv.

"RED" DOOLIN QUILTS.

When Two of His Reading, Pa., Club Were Released.

Reading, Pa., Aug. 4.—Manager C. S. (Red) Doolin of the Reading International league club has resigned and Second Baseman Mike Doolan and utility player Jimmy Walsh, two of the most reliable players of the local squad, have been released. It was said that Doolin had been dismissed at the close of the doubleheader at Newark Sunday, but it now appears that upon the release of Doolan and Walsh the manager quit. Doolin will probably devote his time to business interests in Philadelphia.

Doolan, batting at a 311 clip, may sign with Newark and Walsh with Toronto. Doolin has been handicapped by a late start and inability to secure players to build up a pennant-contending team. Charles (Pop) Ketcher, business manager and scout, will have charge of the team the remainder of the season.

Browne of Rutland. A meeting of the creditors and hearing in the matter will be held before Referee Browne at the law office of Leroy C. Russell in Middlebury Tuesday, Sept. 2.

Why Naval Monopoly?

Secretary Daniels of the navy may be right in urging a continuance of radio service as one of the functions of that department. Of its importance and value to that service there is no doubt, and there should be adequate facilities for it. The secretary's representations and recommendations in regard to that may be fully justified. The same is true of the suggestion of a commercial use of the same stations and facilities, but why it should be an absolute government monopoly for that use, as well as for naval service, is not so obvious. Daniels in his communication to the presiding officers of the two houses of Congress says that for commercial and naval purposes the entire coast line must be furnished with radio stations as a single system. That can only be established by the government, for, if left to private enterprise, these would only be over the great harbors, where the naval stations would also be, and they could not be so unified and standardized as those.

The advantage of the naval stations and their connections in various directions is readily admitted, as is allowing their use for commercial as well as naval purposes. But among the recommendations to Congress of legislation regarding radio communication is that of absolute "government monopoly under the navy," of that between ship and shore in either direction and whatever the character of the ship, and all "transoceanic and international" service likewise. This navy department monopoly could be used not only for government service of any character but for "commercial and press business." That might prove quite important and economical for such service, but it is not so clear why it should be an absolute monopoly in the hands of the government. If there should be any adequate private reason for a separate commercial service by wireless between certain points in a general way, why should it be absolutely prohibited by a government monopoly?—Journal of Commerce.

Anglo-American Competition.

I have been reading a life of George Washington, which has filled me with admiration of your stand against our junkers of those days. And I am familiar with the way we outraged the sentiment of both the North and the South, in the days of our Civil war. So wonder your history books were not precisely Anglophile, and that Americans grew up in a traditional dislike of Great Britain! I am realist enough to know that the past will not vanish like a ghost—just because we have fought side by side in this war; and realist enough to recognize the other elements which make for patches of hearty dislike between our peoples. But, surveying the whole field, I believe there are links and influences too strong for the disruptive forces; and I am sure that the first duty of English and American citizens to-day is to be fair and open to understanding about each other.

If any one will take down the map of the world and study it, he will see at once how that world is ballasted by the English-speaking countries; how, so long as they remain friends, holding as they do the trade routes and the main material resources of the world under their control, the world must needs sail on an even keel. And if he will turn to the less visible chart of the world's mental qualities, he will find a certain reassuring identity of ideals between the various English-speaking races, which form a sort of guarantee of stable unity. Thirdly, in community of language we have a factor in producing unity of ethics, potent as blood itself, for community of language is ever unconsciously producing unity of traditions and ideas.

Americans and Britons, we are both, of course, very competitive peoples, and I suppose consider our respective nations the chosen people of the earth. That is a weakness which, though natural, is extremely silly, and merely proves that we have not yet outgrown provincialism. But competition is possible without reckless rivalry. There was once a bootmaker who put over his shop: "Mens conscia recti" ("A mind conscious of right"). He did quite well, till a rival bootmaker came along, established himself opposite, and put over his shop the word, "Men's, Women's and Children's conscia recti," and did even better.—John Galsworthy in Scribner's.

Interpretation of Article 10.

The interpretation of article 10 of the league covenant, which the president inserted in his message to the senate on the French treaty, was offered deliberately of course, although it was incidental to the general explanation of the alliance with France. In the president's words:

"The covenant of the league of nations provides for military action for the protection of its members only upon advice of the council of the league—advice given. It is to be presumed, only upon deliberation and acted upon by each member of the governments of the member states only if its own judgment justifies such action."

This interpretation, which is clearly consistent with the use of the word "advice" in article 10, safeguards the constitutional power of congress to declare war. Curiously, there are senators opposed to the league, and who see a great crime against our liberties in article 10, who are reported to be in favor of the special treaty with France. Yet the French treaty would bind the country far beyond the obligations of article 10. Article 10 would give the whole congress a chance to deliberate and act on a question of the use of our forces abroad. By this French treaty the president and the present senate would obligate us to fight for France, and how much would any future congress have to say about it?—Springfield Republican.
